

The CRIMSON Path

Specifically Random.

"It's not the destination that defines us, but the resilience we discover on the way."

-A new day dawns, a new struggle. Another day with another self-made hope. Another day of another cruelty and facing the cruelty. Again, a life will be taken or given for a life. Whether right or wrong, don't know cause (Only weak binds a strong in right and wrong. And this is illustrated by those who have converted their cruelty into others hope for success.) but one thing's for sure. What a gorgeous cruelty it is.

Another day of knowing yourself more than you know which requires extra. Extra everyday or after every sleep or every time you wake up again or every unit of time. Don't know but one thing is for sure. I don't know whether it enforces the theory of Self-improvement or not, cause that requires cruelty without any expectation and I wish I had better claims against that cause I don't.

Every day a little extra for yourself in exchange with more requirements from yourself which so perfectly balances out a struggle that you end up getting humble so perfectly that, for sure, reinforces the theory that the world doesn't revolve around you but around your duties. World demands your duties and sacrifices along with a backup (only if the first plan doesn't work which is the case of 50% times) cause you can't keep up with the ever-evolving nature of nature.

-Well another day with traces of living a day more than the day. I think perhaps, that's why old people often wake up early so that they could live the day more than the day. This sounds quite fascinating cause we never thought this way before as we were all very busy in proving ourselves correct and our beliefs.

It is because 'what we can't reach, we make assumptions about it or we hate it'. Similar to. We hate the distances cause either we are obsessed with the destination or we can't reach it. But the thing we don't realize is that, that's either close to the eyes and far from reality (which how beautiful express our desires) or far from eyes and close to the heart or reality or reach. And that's where our priority traces might be. But what to choose? Close to eyes or close to reach? Well, that's completely up to you. Whether you choose easy or a bit less easy. None is wrong, it's all about standards (and let's see where you defines your standards).

But you should never choose on the basis of belief that the world owe you something. It doesn't owe you something just cause something bad happened to you or been happening. Cause nature or karma doesn't rewards on the basis of that.

But it might reward on the basis of reaction on something bad happens. Just like how we react or responds to it. Our reaction mirrors our inside world but it should be unwillingly expectless.

But don't think 'instincts' as a 'type' of that type of reaction. Instincts are affected by gender.

And we need something common here. Cause we shouldn't only live cause 'we don't want to die' or 'living will make anything better' (however this is something common), but the quality of your Karma will make that happen. Again, if you could ever be able to learn how to react to what happens to you then your life will be so much less fucking worse. It will still be awful but you would learn how to react to it.

For, if you don't want to live just cause you don't want to die, then you should at least stop thinking about living. And no matter how good life behaves with you, always be ready for the worse or at least stop demanding for the good. Because if you really want the true enlightenment, then you better embrace the true darkness inside you. And don't think darkness is something badly neglectable. It's just the absence of light. And if you could really delve into the dark, then you would actually know where the light is lacking. And how you delve into dark? You delve into dark by becoming a 2nd or 3rd person for yourself. Observe yourself yourself, and don't let any other person observe you, or at least don't observe that others observe you, or don't let others observe that you don't observe that they observe you. You shouldn't believe that, because that's a lie. And how do you stop the lies? You stop the lies with the truth. And the truth is, you have resources, you have the chance, you have the opportunities, but you don't have the time and that's a truth. As Monk Buddha said: The biggest mistake you make in life is that 'you think that you have time'.

Plus point: Do you know what thing I don't like about time the most?

Other than of "Time is slow when you feel bored and it moves super slow when you feel danger or Fight or Flight mode. It passes quick when you are enjoying it and when you are stressed. It passes super fast when you are late."

Time is unfair when you are honest with yourself. Never get enough of it.

On Time and Change

Time is like a river flowing,
Endless, always going,
Through the twists, the turns, the bends,
It moves us closer to our ends.

Yet in each moment, we may see,
The beauty of what is meant to be,
Change, though hard, brings growth anew,
A path that leads to something true.

But does that means you lack time? Well you don't. But you have the exact amount of time you need in life and that starts from the time when you were born (and that's where you realize that you are late) or more precisely when you get honest with yourself (still late ALAS!) and ends when you die or more precisely when you think you have learned enough (don't think your time already ends).

And for the learning, you only need 4-habits in your life. One that builds your mind, one that builds your body, one that build your finances and one that builds your relationships. Hence, a good life is the process of becoming everything you could be, or you can be.

And in order to become anything you can, you have to be free. You have to understand what the true freedom is. A True freedom Consists of your free will regardless of other's opinion's weightage backed up by the ability to be couraged to be ready to deal with anything life throws at you (so that you could cathh it a bit better).

More precisely, it's a combination of 'I don't care what others think' along with your 'ability to mold yourself according to the situation'. Let's breakdown both aspects of your vulnerability, cause you can't escape harmless.

Not caring what others think is not easy because caring is in our nature, unless we all would be sick of getting betrayed (which is most probably we are). The real problem is not with 'caring what other people think of you', but neglecting/round-offing all other cares about it. I mean, you also have a care that you care about yourself, but neglecting your self-care cause other's is not an healthy approach about life. Yes you are thinking right, I am talking about self-care or self-love. Then the one left is that of 'people's care for you', not 'what you care about what they think'.

So tell me one thing. Do you really think there are people out there who actually feels a care for you? No, they are not. Except any one of them really wants to invest in your life. So the only thing left to do is start taking care of yourself. And it doesn't mean taking pity on yourself or letting yourself lie on bed and serving tasty chips to your body. But, it means being honest with yourself. And how do you become honest with yourself? You do so by working on yourself, carving yourself, grinding yourself (more specific for men). And if you know how to grind yourself yourself (hence you won't wait for someone to come and save you), then you would know how to mold yourself. But here is a catch. Don't let the situation mold you, but decide yourself where to mold or not. And how would you decide that? I don't know. You decide that according to the quality of your personality. Because everyone is different. And this is just so much extremely obvious that I don't know why people ever even mention this. Perhaps to add a bit flow in their talks and display the situational awareness. I don't know, cause everyone is different, Haha.

And why everyone is different? Well, you might think it's cause of faces, voices, heights, thinking, beliefs. But these traits are much smaller. Smaller than you think. Cause the chances for us to ever be humans are of about less than 1%. So there is no chance for those physical and mental traits.

We are different cause of our feedings and the desire to be better than others.

We are different because of our ability to lie. We are different cause we can lie and hide, and no other species on Earth do that and not probably even aliens. We lie to hide from truth. We lie to create our own worlds. We lie to hurt others. We lie cause we hate others.

But still we are all the same. Let's reveal it quick. We're same cause of fear. We all fear. This is the most common trait in all humans (I mean, almost. Cause that's a pretty big claim). Think about it, we fear others, we fear sharing. We fear trusting. We fear losing. We fear the journey. We fear the results. We fear politeness. We fear silence. We fear rivals. We fear other species. And most importantly, we fear death just because we don't want to die, cause we want to live. Cause we think that death is difficult cause we were told that we will be punished after death.

And just keep one thing universal thing in mind. 'Nature cannot be change'.

Confidence is another trend in this society. According to the norms (I think), confidence is nothing but 'ignoring what's happening around you' and 'displaying how happy you are (in your life)'.

Or, confidence is just a combination of these 2 things: Ignore your environment + display your potential charm.

Cause the more happy you are, the more people would like to stay close to you, those who actually adore this confidence. Which somehow re-inforces the theory that: 'No one wants to stay with weak. But don't try to show how strong you are. Let them find themselves.' And the thing which is toxic about this is that, nice ones are used, Shy ones are ignored, rude ones are hated, weak ones are crushed, brave ones die. Smart ones go crazy and what remain is a world full of happy fools.

Oh God, they are empty. And that's what they try to resist the most. I think that resistance could also be humans' biggest tool to escape reality other than that of lying. We resist cause we can resist and there's nothing forbidden in it, unless we couldn't be able to resist. Or should I say Lying is the by-product of resistance? But why resist when you can embrace? Why resist when you can change? Because it's difficult to embrace and change.

And we are hard-wiredly obsessed with survival. Survival makes us adapt with lazy stucks. As I said earlier, it's fear. We are scared of losing fat, scared of suffering and stuff like that. Pretty straight forward. But we resist that too. We don't, don't even except that we don't want to accept.

But don't worry, you can always hide the weakness, by getting fat by visiting Barber regularly, by eating junk, by speaking and laughing more and those who depends on these are slave to every situation. They are affected by everything said and did to them. Cause, they are highly reactive. And reactive ones only needs small triggers. And smallest triggers are generated by biggest haters.

In a world where haters have haters and haters are the true haters, but those who gets the most haters ignores it mostly. And ignoring leads to encouragement, for both sides. The receivers are encouraged to notice a bit better and haters tends to hate more with less drive.

The execution with less drive are known as habits. And habits are powerful. Some habits need the whole character behavior just to quit one habit. A state where you lose your oneself and stuck right before the next one. Old 'You' dies or give up and new one is still not found.

"In every defeat lies the seed of a future victory, but only for those who dare to rise again."

And that's where you get disappointed which leads to doubts and doubts leads to gaps in struggle, which again causes categories and categories are so much appreciated. Categories in which people demand you to behave as if you don't. Those who demand, themselves don't understand the behavior of demanded behaviours. And yet, those are the most confident ones in their own categories. And yet they are most delusional ones to understand others. And leads to that understanding, some achieve and some lost. Just a case, which happens with pain. And pain is your biggest companion

Honorable Mentions.

As in a part of such a society where 'people or we' always just believes in the definitions, I would also have to narrate what a Mention actually is.

So what is a mention?

1: Well, if you ask Sadhguru, he would say: "See what is a mention? It's nothing but a supporting feeling for a claim that someone finds either exciting or itching. "

2: And if you ask Sandeep Maheshwari about it, he would say: "It's a guard which ensures that you don't make excuses and achieve your dreams"

2. In the Pursuit of Dreams

Dreams are whispers in the night,
A call that urges you to fight,
Though challenges may block the way,
Your strength will rise with each new day.

So walk with courage, heart in hand,
For in your dreams, you will stand,
And find your purpose shining bright,
A beacon in the darkest night.

3: If you ask TRS Clips, He would say: Actually He wouldn't say but he would rather ask like "Just for the audience, what is a mention?" from the guest sitting front of him in his podcast.

4: And if you ask your father about it, he would say: "No matter what it is, just do whatever you like with confidence and never fear anyone because we are stronger than them all".

5: And if you ask your mother, she would say: "Just use this same time in something more important" or "Do your studies instead of wasting your time in it."

6: And if you ask your sister, she would say: "You are just useless and eats and sits all day.”

7: And for your brother, he would say: “Slow down slow down. You showoffs a lot.”

8: Now, if you ask any Islamic scholar about Mention., then he would say: “As in our HOLY QURAN, it is mention that a Non-Muslim will surely go to Hell (no matter how good he is and how much he loves animals) and a Muslim will surely go to Heaven (no matter how much big sinner or how big slaves they are to their desires).”

And he would be sitting waiting for him to die to enter Heaven undeservingly [if there is actually something like Heaven or Hell after this life {only if there is a life after this one (unless we would had been lied so that we would sit still and not worry to much, otherwise which would bother them a lot to handle our worried selves) } which would most probably be the case that we would disappear for a Holy cause (which is a case in the court of nature) for the lives after us]. Which is not right, isn't it?

9: Now let's just ask any teacher about it, and he would say: “The relation between claiming a fact and confidently presenting to others (especially in the front of whole class). For example (which is another Norm among us cause we just like to suppose a reference so that we would not have to worry much about the real deal), let's suppose an invisible ball is flying somewhere in the air with a mysterious constant speed at a unreachable height above us which is unknown to all the birds flying above us and You have to write a whole long question of 15 marks and more them 5 pages on it.”

What the hell and how the hell it makes sense to them (well, it doesn't makes sense to us either but they say it is important (just like any other feared killed assigned duties of their victims))?

You probably be thinking why I am telling all this to you. Eggzactly, that's what we need, 'Thinking'. So keep thinking. But have you noticed that there are two common factors about all those people whom you asked about 'Mentions'.

The first one is: They all have different beliefs (and all of them might criticise each other). And that's where I wonders, then why we actually celebrate Independence day of union by making independent unions?.

The second one is: They all have some audience listening to them {"sighs!, I wish I also had some audience listening to me" (and that's what you might think I would be thinking. Dunno, never thought about it.)}. But we are not here looking for the audience. If you notice a little less deeper, then you will find out that they all do what they are good at. Hence, that's why we feel disguised cause we are not actually very good at anything. And that's what we will try to work on, cause there is one thing for sure that which we are all good at. Yes, you guessed it wrong. It's 'making excuses'.

Ola Human! Welcome forward to this disclosure.

So, what do you think where we should start from (only if you could change this after you read it)? Because there have been a lot of matters till now that we have failed in. So does lot of excuses there are.

A) The very first time we failed was when we were little and didn't know how to talk. We failed to tell our parents what we wanted. Whether we were thirsty or hungry. Whether we were feeling hot or cold. Wanted to sleep or sit-up. [Unless we didn't even know what actually feeling was. And if that's the case then what was controlling us was our desire to live (which is survival). Whether we wanted to keep living just cause we had felt life the first time or we actually had found out that life is precious instead of not even exist. Cause otherwise, you wouldn't even knew you used to be existing in the, Past's Future! I guess.?] I don't know what to call it. Name it yourself.

B) Then the 2nd time we failed was when we were grown up a little and started to explore the world. We failed to assume to that the world was very nice place (But it doesn't mean we didn't try, didn't you?). But it wasn't and still isn't.

C) After that, we failed to keep our body growing (which is now the most regretting fact of our lives.).

D) Then we failed to keep a happy relation with our every relative. Which turned out to be better (I know you got it).

And there would be lot of other failures like 'couldn't make everyone happy with you' and 'projecting our-selves as we imagine' and 'picking the right emotions in front of wrong persons in unknown situations', and many more like these. But these should not be our concern because it's not. As failure's weightage in our future is as much small as that of us being humans in the first place. But their importance lies very close to the quality of our success. Cause it's not about what you can and how much you can take.

But it's about how much you can take and still giving away and keep moving forward. Because the world is yours. Treat everyone kindly including poor, weak, ugly, unique and animals. Yes that's what 'everyone' means. What else you were thinking? Your friends?

Okay let's get out of this mistakes trip (but don't we actually explore during trip?). and explore the excuses

People play double game in Pakistan:

It doesn't mean participating in two kinds of sports no it doesn't. But what it actually means is subconsciously disagreeing your own rule for benefit.

For example (the same example we discussed earlier), Pakistan's former Prime Minister Imran Khan made a controversial statement regarding the increase in rape cases during an interview in 2021.

When asked about the issue, he emphasized the importance of modesty in society and suggested that women should dress modestly to avoid "tempting" men. He linked the rise in rape cases to what he described as the "spread of obscenity" in society. This statement was widely criticized both locally and internationally for victim-blaming and not addressing systemic issues like law enforcement, education, and societal attitudes toward sexual violence. Critics argued that it shifted responsibility onto women instead of focusing on holding perpetrators accountable or implementing structural reforms to combat gender-based violence. Critics of Imran Khan have accused him of playing a "double game" because his statements on sensitive issues like rape often seemed contradictory to the progressive image he aimed to project internationally.

Similarly, Nawaz Sharif can also be blamed for a double game during his third tenure as Prime Minister (2013–2017), concerning Pakistan's relations with India and his role as a civilian leader. Nawaz Sharif often emphasized the need for peaceful relations with India and championed dialogue to resolve issues like Kashmir.

But the bells rings and says: "If they don't have what you want, then don't listen what they say. There is no greater waste of time then justifying your actions to the people who have a life you don't want".

Avoid accidently hurting sick people or at least don't project yourself strong.

Because when you are on the way-up everyone roots you because you remind them of their dreams (don't think you are as good you think cause they are going to try to express that). And when you are at the top, everyone tries to tear you down cause you remind them of what they gave up on (but remember when you are losing, you are not as bad as you think you are). Cause the best quality you can develop in life is being unstoppable.

3. The Path Ahead

The road ahead is unclear,
Yet it's the one we all must steer,
With faith and hope to light the way,
We journey on from day to day.

Each step we take, though small it seems,
Builds the foundation for our dreams.
And though the end is far from sight,
We keep moving, toward the light.

Really lovely frame:

When I am/was writing all this I realized: "The magic you are looking for is in the work you are avoiding".

"Victory is not in the end, but in the courage to continue when the world is silent."

Hence the saying: A quality person is the one has the following traits.

- a) He is comfortable in his own skin (don't tell me you want to get fair skin so that you could get more validation).
- b) He knows where he is going (and not the college or home).
- c) He has the fun and awareness while he is going there (don't survive like animals and prove that you can live like an educated human who is able to evaluate).

But going where? The concluded path he comforted on him/herself. But you would be surprised to know that comforting is also a type of weakness. Where you neglect a potential as a human which can conquer the whole world but still assures him/herself that what's going on is fine and enough.

Never settle yourself for the less. But it doesn't mean 'supposing that' you owe the whole world.

First know your worth. And how? It is decided on the basis of how much value you provide to world. So, you can easily tell how much value you are providing to the world.

But you will surely ask, 'isn't it true that we can always improve the quality of our values for the world?'

You got it. If there is always room for the quality of your values to improve then your worth can also always increase. So keep worthing your worth or something like that. Cause you won't get this chance again and for the worst case just suppose that there is not after-life after this life. Then you will simply die or vanish and you won't even remember that you used to even exist. No memories no nothing. All those people, all those emotions will be forgot by yourself and no one else (and you couldn't even blame anyone).

And when you're at the top, everyone fades into the background, except those who truly resonate with your journey. Those who saw beyond the surface, who understood that every victory was born from countless struggles, silent sacrifices, and unspoken battles.

At the end of the day, the world won't remember your moments of triumph as much as it will remember how you lived through your defeats. How you rose when no one was watching. How you learned to embrace the dark, not as something to fear, but as a place where true growth occurs.

Because, in the end, it's not about reaching the top (but you still can), but about the quality of the climb. And the ones who reach the summit are not those who sought it for the glory, but those who sought it to become something greater than they were the day before. It's you verses you and no one else. But yes, you have to remove those who creates disturbances.

And so, as we continue this endless pursuit of self-discovery, let's remember that the real game is not about winning or losing, but about embracing the struggle itself. For in the struggle, we find our purpose, and in purpose, we find the courage to keep moving forward.

As long as you breathe, the journey isn't over. And as long as you grow, you've won.
